A HUNTER KNOCKS DOWN A GRIZZLY, AN ELK AND HIMSELF.
(COMMUNICATED.)

H. J. Sheldon left his camp, at Cooper City, on the Pecos, recently in search of game. About 4 o'clock in the afternoon the burro, which had wandered ahead, came running back, apparently in great terror, ears and tail erect, eyes glaring, making that peculiar, mournful sound for which its species is noted, and refusing to be caught or comforted. Not being able to make out from the report of the confused burro just what had happened, Mr. Sheldon cocked his gun and advanced slowly and cautiously on the unknown enemy. Crawling along on his hands and knees for about a quarter of a mile, he at length doubled a bend in the river, and there, standing in full view in the meadow, and not more than 150 yards away, he saw a huge grizzly bear, with three cubs, and just beyond the bear, and in direct range with her, an animal that he at once recognized as the long-sought-for elk. Neither of the beasts was aware of his approach; so, quietly rising upon one knee and resting his rifle across the other, which is Mr. Sheldon's favorite position in shooting, he took deliberate aim. Bang went the gun, away sped the bullet, and down fell two animals—in fact, three—the bear, the elk and Mr. Sheldon himself. The bullet had cut the backbone of the bear completely in two, and passing on through, had lodged in the heart of the elk, and the extraordinary task to which the rifle had been subjected produced such a violent recoil that the hunter himself was stretched flat upon the ground. Recovering himself as speedily as possible, Mr. Sheldon advanced upon the prey, hunting-knife in hand, but life was extinct in both animals. The little cubs, on hearing the report of the gun, fled; but being only a few weeks old, were speedily captured, tied in bags and fastened on the bag of the horse. The shock gave Mr. Sheldon such a twist in his stomach that it twisted the J. of his middle name into an L. He removed to Honolulu, where he has resided for some years, but he seldom goes gunning now.
